COMMONWEALTH STUDY CONFERENCE EAGLE GOLD MINE TOUR

In June, members of the Victoria Gold team hosted a group from the Duke of Edinburgh's Commonwealth Study Conference (CSC) at the Eagle Gold Mine.

The CSC is held every six years and this year, the diverse group visited the Yukon and the mine and included participants from Nigeria, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, India, Malaysia, the United Kingdom, Tanzania, South Africa, Uganda and other Canadian jurisdictions.

The CSC group participants are emerging leaders in their resident countries and hold senior level roles in business, government or non-governmental organizations. The CSC provides the delegates the opportunity to experience the interaction of businesses, their employees and the communities in which they operate first-hand.

"The CSC group was relatively new to mining operations, and as such were very interested to learn about the impacts and benefits the Eagle Gold Mine has on the surrounding environment and local communities," says Victoria Gold's Nico Harvey, who co-hosted the mine tour. "We were pleased to showcase the high ESG standards we employ at the mine to these future global leaders and answer their questions about Victoria Gold's commitment to providing benefits to the First Nation of Na-Cho Nyak Dun, the Village of Mayo and the Yukon."

In addition to Nico, Senior Mine Engineer, the Victoria Gold host team included: Kelly Magnusson, Senior Administrative Coordinator; Tim Fisch, Operations; Kevin LeDrew, Superintendent, Health, Safety and Security; Andrew Balance, Manager, Mine Operations; and, Jeff Winterton, Manager, Process, Operations.

"We were also proud to share Victoria Gold's ongoing commitment to reducing the Eagle Gold Mine's environmental impact on the region and the territory and how we, as the Yukon's largest private sector employer contribute to the social and economic strength of the Yukon," adds Nico.
